RUTAN

Flexibility and great comfort on slender legs

A stool, a seat with a backrest, and a corner module. RUTAN shares the same upholstered modules as its sister RUT, but with its slender steel legs, RUTAN is more spontaneous and mobile than RUT, which rests firmly on its solid oak blocks and steel beam.

RUTAN meets an important need for flexibility and offers the possibility to adapt interiors as needs change, whether daily or only occasionally.

The updated RUTAN essentially consists of a single leg, a leg that can be specified in different colours, with or without castors and in a version where the leg continues up past the seat and ends in a conveniently placed tabletop. Build standalone RUTAN modules with four legs per unit. Then add magnets to easily bring the individual pieces together to form sofas, corner sofas, or benches.

If a connected sofa is desired from the start, the modules can be assembled in a more permanent way, where the legs also function as linking brackets and the modules share the leg set. Should the future require it, the sofa can be divided back into standalone easy chairs or pouffes simply by adding extra legs.

Despite its strict form, RUTAN is remarkably comfortable. The upholstered modules feature nozag springs and moulded polyurethane, and your choice of textile, leather, and steel colour lets you play freely with character and expression. Whether you want RUTAN to be monochrome or to pop with contrasting colours - it's entirely up to you.
